

A Letter From the Heart of VOICE

Dear Friends, Supporters, Survivors, and Community Partners,

There are moments in life that change us forever.

For me, that moment came through a tragedy that no family should ever have to endure—the loss of my mother and grandmother to domestic violence. In an instant, my family's world was forever changed. The pain, grief, confusion, and overwhelming journey that followed opened my eyes to a reality that so many survivors and families experience every day: the need for compassionate support, advocacy, guidance, and a community willing to walk beside them.

From that pain, VOICE was born.

VOICE—Victims Outreach, Intervention, Care & Empowerment—was created with one purpose: to ensure that no survivor feels unheard and no family affected by violence feels forgotten.

This organization represents more than services and resources. It represents compassion in moments of crisis, advocacy when someone feels powerless, and hope when the road ahead seems impossible to see.

My vision for VOICE is to build a place where survivors are met with dignity, where families grieving unimaginable loss find understanding, and where communities are educated and empowered to stand against domestic violence.

Every resource we provide, every partnership we establish, every volunteer we train, and every life we touch will be guided by a simple promise:

"A voice for those whose voices were taken, and empowerment for those finding their voices again."

Those words are not just a statement—they are the heartbeat of VOICE.

Although I cannot change what happened to my family, I can choose how I honor the lives of those we lost. I choose to honor them through service. Through compassion. Through advocacy. Through action.

To every survivor who feels alone, every child affected by violence, every family searching for answers, and every person carrying the weight of grief: we see you, we believe you, and we stand with you.

This is our promise. This is our purpose. This is our VOICE.

With gratitude and unwavering commitment,

Sjakkani Daniels Founder & President VOICE Outreach & Advocacy Foundation

Turning pain into purpose, and purpose into lasting change.
